Summary Description: Went to catch the Sisters & Stitches Joined by the Cloth exhibition on its last day in the gallery at the Piano Factory. Met quilter Naomi Henry, whose work is in the show and who is a founding member and past president of the quilting guild, Sisters & Stitches Joined by the Cloth. Henry says the guild, established in 1997, is the only organized Afro-American group in New England. The guild was asked to demonstrate at the MFA during the exhibition of the Gees Bend quilts of Alabama.

"The problem with the quilting thing is that most people don't consider it an art. I started about 30 years ago, taking some classes. I consider two women my mentors. My mother knitted, crocheted, and tatted, but she didn't quilt." Naomi is retired from federal government work.

"I find fabric - my nose will tell me. . . I like quilting because I love playing with fabric.

When asked what she thought of the Gee's Bend quilts she said, "I thought they were incredible. It's very hard to quilt through corduroy and denim."
